

CHARLES O'HAY

Good Dark, My Love

I want to photograph you in this light, I said. You'll need to step back, said the world, if you want to get all of me. I edged backward through a cornfield. How's that? I said. Further, said the world. I rowed out across the sea. How's that? I said. Further, said the world. So I moved outward through the dark, like someone leaving a theater in the middle of a film, until I reached a place where it was cold and all the trees were bone-white and bare. Funny, I thought, how we say frozen when we mean still. What if we said night when we meant dark? I stopped and looked back. That's fine, said the world, right there. Now, I said, hold the moon to your cheek and smile.

---

CHARLES O'HAY's work has appeared in over 150 publications, including Kentucky Review, Cortland Review, Gargoyle, Riprap, and The New York Quarterly. His two collections — Far from Luck (2011) and Smoking in Elevators (2014) — are available from Lucky Bat Books.

